Nelsons New Illustrated Bible Dictionary

WADI ED-DALYEH A dry riverbed in the Jordan Valley. The discovery place of the Samaria Papyri from the fourth century BC.

Location
Wadi ed-Dalyeh is located about 9 miles (15 km) north of Jericho and 8 miles west of the Jordan River, about halfway between Jericho and Samaria (Gopp, "Samaria Papyri," 3; Tafel, et al., Tafel Imperii Romani, 296). It sits on the western edge of the Jordan valley, and makes a sharp cut westward into the central hill country. This is east of the central ridge route, also known as the "Way of the Beni-Archs." As the wadi winds west from the Jordan valley, sheer cliffs rising hundreds of feet above the valley floor are honey-combed with numerous caves (N. Lapp, "Dalyeh, Wadi-ed" [2000], 164; Lapp and Lapp, "Account," 1).

Discovery of the Samaria Papyri
As with many of the riverbeds found in the central and Judean hill country, several thousand caves mark the limestone cliffs and hills. Bedouins of the Ta'amireh tribe—who due to a drought moved north of their normal pasture lands—discovered a cave containing materials dating from the fourth century BC (Lapp and Lapp, "Account," 1-6). The Ta'amireh tribe had initially gained recognition in 1927 for the first discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls in Qumran Cave 1. Their movement north in the winter of 1966 brought them to a new area of caves. Some of these caves were small, while others had numerous passageways (N. Lapp, "Dalyeh, Wadi-ed" [2000], 164). They found the caves by digging test pits through layers of bat droppings, then tapping the limestone exterior to listen for sounds that indicated passageways (Lapp and Lapp, "Account," 2-3).

In a cave called Mugharet Abu-Shinjeih (Cave of the Father of the Digger), Bedouins discovered numerous human remains, ancient pots, a gold ring, a ball (stamped clay seal), beads, coins, and some still-sealed scrolls and fragments of papyri (Lapp and Lapp, "Account," 3; N. Lapp, "Dalyeh, Wadi-ed" [2000], 164). Many of the scrolls were fragmentary and some were significantly damaged. Paul and Nancy Lapp, of the American School of Oriental Research, concluded based on the style of script that the papyri could be dated to the fourth century BC (Cross, "Discovery," 110; Dalek, Les manuscrits, 5-7).

Archaeology
Lapp directed two seasons of excavations in January 1966 and February 1966 (Lapp and Lapp, "Cave Clearances," 7-10). The archaeological site included 10-15 archaeologists and several other additional workers ("Dalyeh, Wadi-ed," 16; see also, Cross, 11). Two caves were the pri-
